

Our Local Santha (Farmers' Market)

Author - Radha Gopalan, Published on - 30.3.2014

This is the story of how a local farmers' market was born in an arid corner of Rayalseema. For over a year and a half the dalit, landless women and women from peasant families were trying to find ways to improve their nutrition through increased intake of vegetables and greens. The spiraling vegetable prices and poor access to vegetable markets were making it unaffordable. Other farmers who grow small quantities of vegetables for home use wanted an avenue to sell their surplus. The producers and consumers came together and set up a local vegetable shandy. Local production and local consumption. Not only the rural community but all of us living on the Rishi Valley School campus are now enjoying fresh, seasonal, local produce. ...Read On/Download First Published on Rayalseema Diaries blog Photo Credits: Radha Gopalan Contact: Radha Gopalan
